The baker s daughteris watching me through the reed-slicks, her eyes surrounded by flourey feathers. Her wings canvas the river. I dip my twitching toes in her waters, her eyes pull me in as she says if she could she d go back, back to before her life turned owl: she d give him all the bread he wanted, she d bake foreverthen pile up his pockets and run, her arms burnt from the loaves. My eyes itch like yeast. She says they hate our flowers and songs, our stupid owlsh faces, and her mud slurps my violets, I sink my knees down into her fishes and bubbles and claws. No girl can ever die honest, she toots, tugging me in with her beak.Funded by Arts Council England, Faber New Poets aims to identify and support emerging talents at an early stage in their careers.
