One brokenhearted girl, three meddling sisters, and an intervention plan called The Monday Mandates. MEET JULIETTE GUSTAFSON Juliette, the eldest sister of the Gustafson girls, is heart-broken after breaking up with her noncommittal boyfriend of almost ten years. Determined she isn't getting over Mike quickly enough, her three sisters devise The Monday Mandates, an intervention plan requiring Juliette to endure what turns out to be a series of remarkably disastrous blind dates: TheraPaul, Frisky Frank, TAZ the rock star, and the stoic Tim Larsen, among others. Then there's Victor Jarrett, the police officer with an affinity for pulling Juliette over when she's at her very worst. All grown up now, Juliette has become the quintessential doormat, Renata, the self-appointed matriarchal figure. Phoebe is-according to Renata-borderline narcissistic, and Georgia is on the verge of a major identity crisis. Then there's Angela Clinton, the senior class darling who drove her cherry black 1970 el Camino into the side of their parents car on the night of Juliette's high school graduation, leaving the girls orphans. Angela's prison sentence is winding down; soon she'll be eligible for parole and moving back to town. Will the G-FOURce...
