Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Descriptive Botany: A Practical Guide, to the Classification of Plants, With a Popular Flora By the common practice of the schools, pupils often go through the botanical text-books with only the most incidental attention to the real objects of study. As there is no training in observation, there can be no attempt at the exercise of the reason and judgment of the learner upon the results of observation. To attain this important end, botany must be studied in its actual objects. The characters of plants must become familiarly known by the detailed and repeated examination and accurate description of large numbers of plants. The pupil must proceed step by step in this preliminary work - digesting his observations, and making the facts his own. From the beginning he will be engaged in comparing his observations, and reasoning upon his facts. As he extends his knowledge, the work of comparison and grouping calls for a higher exercise of thought. In the final classification of plants, problems of increasing complexity arise. Plants are to be placed in...
